Report Code: Q2 2023 14.2

Dear Marilyn,
Thank you so much for your generous gift! It's donors like the Tulalip Tribes Charitable Contributions Fund that make our work possible.

Throughout the world, visual storytelling has served as a reflection of society and has been used to represent ideas, values, and emotions. Storytelling through film enhances our human experiences by promoting cultural uniqueness, presenting diverse ideologies, and reflecting different lived experiences.

Thanks to the Tulalip Tribes Charitable Contributions Fund, the Social Justice Film Institute continues to increase empathy, raise public awareness, create meaningful community partnerships, and drive collective action. Without your support, there would be no way to hold up a mirror to display the extent of human cruelty, ignorance, and bias. Social justice storytelling through film is a unique motivator, capable of bringing people together to work towards social justice solutions when nothing else can.

We recently completed our annual Social Justice Film Festival, an event that harnesses the power of visual storytelling to inspire, empower, and educate. SJFF serves as a resource and a critical lens to democratize filmmaking and produce brave, cutting-edge documentary and narrative stories otherwise absent from the mainstream media. It is a place for activism, where activists use audio and film to imagine and inspire transformational change. In addition to welcoming the community to five days of insightful films, SJFF facilitated discussions among key representatives and the audience for a more in-depth understanding of the films and related issues. It is important for SJFF to look beyond traditional, formal panel discussion processes. Attached are photos of the event that took place October 11-15, 2023. For the five-day film festival, about 577 individuals participated and attended the event.

We're excited that you've chosen to help us along our journey and hope for a long and fruitful relationship.

Take care,

Sam
